“ I'm so sad to hear of Mrs Pat's passing. I was her Speech Therapist several years ago when I worked for Alacare. She was a very sweet lady and I pray God will comfort you as you grieve for her.

“ Let me tell you about my friend Pat.

She was a woman of action and words. She cared about the needs of those around her and did what she could. I didn't know her as a teacher, neighbor or Mother. We were not related. We did not share the same denomination, though we are both Christian, but she taught me, encouraged me, reached out to me in my need, challenged me in my faith, and loved me. I do not know why.

We had lived over 1000 miles from each other, but her husband and mine were friends and had been co-workers at one time. She had heard that I was suffering in my illness and though she had good reason to feel sorry for herself, though she had reason to be bitter about her circumstances, though she also had challenges with her health, she reached out to me in cards and letter. Every few weeks a beautiful get well card with encouraging words and personal note, and even birthday, and anniversary cards. This went on for years. I learned that she was the card lady for many other people, and she blessed people with her stunningly beautiful needlepoint, but she was God's hand of encouragement to me. Her love made a difference in my life. Even in her illness the past 8 years, she has taught me to grow my love, through service to her.

I am just one of many many other people who can witness to her love. It wouldn't be fair to witness for each of many friends, John and family, children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren, many who have gone before her. I know how she opened her home to her children in their need, and how she loved every baby and caring about women in crisis pregnancy and giving support throughout the planning and building stages of the Fort Payne pregnancy Center.

So what does God say about love?

Love suffers long. Love is kind. Love is not puffed up, bears all things, believes, hopes, endures.

I love the words Jesus said about a woman who poured oil on his head. He said, "She did what she could." And this is what love is.

Thank you God for my dear friend Pat.
