“ Nan, the realization of you being gone is hitting extra hard this morning. More than it usually does. Seeing all the yard sales all over the place reminded me of when I would take you to them and as usual you would buy things for your family instead of yourself. So I came to your grave, knocked off the grass from your headstone and cried. So many tears I have cried for you since you went to be with our Lord. People say time heals all wounds or at least lessens the heartache. So far time has done neither for me. So many things have happened and that I would love to tell you about. To hear your voice one more time " I love you too son." Times like these are harder for me to cope with. Until we meet again, just know you and Paw are always in my heart and in my thoughts.

“ Sitting on the porch this morning drinking some coffee, listening to the birds sing, and just seeing how beautiful this day is. I got to thinking about you and how when I used to spend the night and stay up almost all night watching tv even though you didn't want me too. Then waking up every morning when you did and drink a cup of coffee with you on the porch and do the same thing I'm doing right now. Just simply looking at how beautiful the day is. I miss you Nan. I miss talking to you, watching TV with you, helping with you gardening stuff even though I probably was just more in the way than I was help. I just miss you Nan, and I wish I had more time with you. You've been on my mind a lot these past couple days so I just wanted to say that I miss you and I love you and I hope to see you one day soon Nan.

“ Nan it's been a little over a week now since you went to heaven with Paw. My heart still hurts. I miss you so so much and would give anything to spend another day with you, to hear your voice, to see you smile, and to hear you say I love you too son. It still doesn't seem real that you're gone. I love you forever.
